At a meeting on Monday night, attended by representatives of all West Bank settlements, it was agreed to draw up a rotation system to ensure that a permanent presence will be maintained in Joseph's Tomb.

Acting defence minister Mordechai Zipori visited the settlers yesterday and told them that, contrary to the picture they have been presenting, the security situation on roads in the area is "not so

The settlers have been demanding that anyone convicted of such attacks should be deported, necessary, together with their families, and far harsher prison sentences and fines imposed.

A senior U.S. administration official told reporters at the White House that the U.S. and Israel would begin formal negotiations in December on the possible establishment of a free-trade area between the U.S. and Israel. Such an agreement, which Israel has sought for over two years, "could be con-cluded in a few months time," the official said.

For his part, Shamir said that a free-trade, agreement would "revolutionize" Israel's export opportunities to the U.S.

According to the senior administration official, the U.S. also agreed to allow Israel to spend 15 per cent of the U.S. foreign military sales (FMS) assistance in Israel. This would be designed, the official said, "to stimulate Israel's economy" and to promote Israel's industrial development.

Zamir rules welfare pay to ex-soldiers discriminatory

Attorney-General Yitzhak Zamir has ordered Labour and Social Affairs Minister Aharon Uzan to stop paying social welfare allowances to former soldiers, because such payments are illegal.

Zamir said in his letter that the petition to the High Court of Justice by MKs Mohammad Wattad and Hummad Halaila regarding the question of increased payments to yeshiva students raised the question of their legality. After consulting with the legal advisers of the Treasury, the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs and the National Insurance Institute, Zamir said, he had come to the conclusion that, from a legal point of view, such payments should not be made.

The attorney-general said that the ministries had so far failed to come up with a formula which would guarantee payments to those needing them wihthout any discrimination.

In their High Court petition, Wattad and Halaila argue that equalizing payments to yeshiva students with those of former soldiers discriminates against the country's non-Jewish citizens. (Itim)

Abuhatzeira to stay out of the cabinet meanwhile

SARAH HONIG Post Political Reporter

TEL AVIV. - Former labour and social affairs minister Aharon Abuhatzeira does not intend to reenter the cabinet for the time being, reliable Tami Party sources told The Jerusalem Post yesterday. Abuhatzeira is now doing outside work at a Ramle police station in lieu of the three months' imprisonment to which he was sentenced for fraud. He is due to complete this work on January 2. While doing time, Abuhatzeira decided not to appear in the Knesset. But he and his party's top officials, including Labour and Social Affairs Minister Aharon Uzan, had long said that as soon as he completes his sentence, Abuhatzeira would return to the cabinet.

Abuhatzeira's mooted return to: the cabinet aroused a great deal of criticism both in the coalition and outside it. Now, according to highranking Tami sources. Abuhatzeira has decided to impose "a coolingoff" period on himself and refrain from returning to the cabinet for at least three months after he completes his sentence. Uzan will thus continue in office, and, according to some Tami sources, it may be that Abuhatzeira will decide not to reenter the cabinet at all.

After his release, Abuhatzeira plans to go on a series of tours around the country to drum up support for Tami.

Tami, meanwhile, is seeking! to rid itself of some of its narrow ethnic identity and team up with groups which have Ashkenazi politicians. Tami's most prominent political target is the National Religious Party faction, led by Education Minister Zevulun Ham-

Tami is an NRP breakaway party and its major feud is with the faction of Interior Minister Yosef Burg, Hammer's rival. Tami and the Hammer faction cooperated in several localities in the recent municipal elections, in which the NRP did not manage to field a unified list.

Pelicans on their way to Africa eat two to three kilos of Israeli fish per day.

Farmers defy law, shoot voracious pelicans

By YA'ACOV FRIEDLER

HAIFA. - Pelicans on their way to winter in Africa are once again eating tons of fish from ponds in the Beit She'an and coastal areas. Fish Breeders Union secretary Amnon Levin told The Jerusalem Post that the fish farmers are shooting the big birds, because they simply cannot afford to let them feast.

Each pelican eats from two to three kilos of fish every day at a cost to the breeders of thousands of shekels. Hunters who take the law into their own hands face a possible year in jail or fine of IS200,000 under the Law, for the Protection of Levin said the breeders are resigned to some losses as the pelicans pass through in the autumn, but this year, due to the prolonged warm spell, they are not moving on. They are outstaying their welcome and helping themselves to the convenient fish at IS150 per kg. (wholesale).

The breeders sympathize with the nature protection buffs. However, because the Fund for Natural Damages does not recognize the poaching ("because we can't produce the corpus delicti of the dead fish to prove the loss"), the breeders say they have no choice but to protect themselves against massive losses. These could run into Levin noted that they had tried other ways, including stretching ropes over the smaller ponds to make it difficult for the pelicans to swoop on the fish and shooting off blank charges to scare them. But the pelicans are very intelligent as well as extremely sharp eyed, and have learned to evade the ropes and ignore the blank shots as harmless.

3 hotels warned: clean up, make repairs—or lose grade

By HAIM SHAPIRO Jerusalem Post Reporter

Three hotels, one of which belongs to MK Menahem Porush, have been warned by the Tourism Ministry to clean up and repair their premises or risk losing their present grade, The Jerusalem Post learned

The three are the Central Hotel in Jerusalem, which has four stars, and the Commodore and Excelsion Hotels in Tel Aviv, with three and two stars, respectively. The hotels were told they have a fortnight in which to submit a time schedule of repairs, which must be completed within three months. If not, they will automatically lose one star.

The Central Hotel was found to be dirty and neglected, especially in the kitchen. The kitchen and lobby are smaller than required in a fourstar hotel. The rooms were found to have torn carpets and wallpaper. and the furniture was termed unsuitable for such a grade of hotel. Since the beginning of the year, the hotel has been operating without a licence, the ministry said.

A hotel source said yesterday that the Tourism Ministry has no idea of what it means to run a hotel like the Central, It may lack some facilities, but it has two synagogues and a mikre, (ritual bath), the source said.

For this reason, the hotel has a higher occupancy than any other, he said.

The Commodore was found to have walls needing painting and renair, broken sinks, toilets and furniture, torn sheets and piloweases, unsightly carpeting and faulty air conditioning. The manager told The Post that repairs are made constantly, but that he could not comment on the ministry's complaints, because he had not yet received its

As for the Excelsior, the ministry demanded that a sewage pit be closed, that toilets and the adjoining rooms he disinfected and aired, and that junk on the premises be removed.

Tourism Ministry press officer Zvi Rimon told The Past yesterday that not all hotels had to be subjected to such threats. A number of hotels were previously warned to ; correct shortcomings, and some, i. like the Eyal Hotel in Eilat (three . stars), had made all the required repairs within three months

Rimon also stressed that the ministry would continue to inspect hotels, restaurants, taxis, service stations and other tourist sites and would publicize positive, as well as negative findings, "The public has a right to know the kind of service it is getting for its money," he said.

Conference on the family at BGU

Jerusalem Post Reporter BEERSHEBA - Over 100 people, many of them Beduin, this week attended a two-day Jewish-Moslem conference on the The Family as a Means of Imparting Values, held at the Ben-Gurion University.

At yesterday's seminar, Rabbi Shmuel Avidor Hacohen likened the Jewish family to a tent: a closed unit which is open to the outside. If children would be given their basic rights as individuals from an early age, they would not feel the need to rebel later on, he said.

Aref Abu-Rabia, a school principal from the Beduin town of Rahat, said that for Arabs, school is simply a place for the imparting of technical information, while the family remains the sole authority for the child's schooling as a person. Traditions pass from mother to daughter and father to son. A teacher who tries to teach his pupil a moral lesson will be chastised by the parent. Abu-Rabia said.

Church leaders in South Africa at vigil for blacks

MAGOPA, South Africa (AP). -Top church leaders gathered for an all-night vigil Monday night with 300 black families who face eviction from their "black spot" village within "white" South Africa.

State President Marais Viljoen signed an order II days ago giving the remaining residents of Magopa until yesterday to move to an area set aside for blacks about 100 kilometres away.

A court rejected an appeal against the order on Friday on behalf of the villagers from the Bakwena tribe, who have lived in Magopa since 1911. About 180 families already have left the village, many of them after bulldozers knocked down schools and churches in June and July.

African ex-emperor fails in comeback try

PARIS (AP). - A plot by exiled former Central African emperor Jean-Bedel Bokassa to return to his country and seize power was foiled over the weekend by Ivory Coast President Felix Houphouet-Boigny, official French sources reported Monday.

The sources, insisting on anonymity, said a plane chartered by some of Bokassa's political friends landed in the Ivory Coast capital of Abidjan on Saturday for a clandestine flight to Bangui, capital of the Central African Republic, but was not permitted to take off.

BRUSSELS (Reuter). - The European Christian Democratic Union (UEDC) protested yesterday against what it called a "fasciststyle" raid by Maltese police on the headquarters of Malta's opposition National party on Sunday night.

He said 200 people formed teams to drown and club to death the dogs after a city announcement on October 11 that, for reasons of health and safety, private dog owning is now taboo. Commonwealth takes soft line on Grenada

NEW DELHI (AP). - The Commonwealth wound up a week-long summit yesterday and took its expected soft line on the U.S. invasion of Grenada. But for the first time, it censured Washington over Southwest Africa, or Namibia.

"Heads of government agreed... that the emphasis should be on reconstruction, not recrimination." the communique said, making no mention of the U.S.

But in reference to the strong criticisms of the invasion particularly by African states, it said the Commonwealth nations . "reaffirmed their commitment to the principles of independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity." The communique also said that an all-Caribbean force is ready "to assist in the maintenance of law and order in Grenada," if the current interim administration of technocrats - which they "welcomed" - requested it. But on southern Africa, the Com-

وبداب لاهراملي مرأيدك القالم العراساي الفاهداني THE ISRAELI COUNCIL FOR ISRAELI-PALESTINIAN PEACE

BETWEEN TRIPOLI AND TULKARM

 In view of the general rejoicing in Jerusalem at Syria's attempt to annihilate the independent Palestinian national movement; in view of the unlimited support given by Washington to the extreme hawks in Israel, and by Moscow to the Syrian regime;

In view of the increasing repression of the Palestinian population in the occupied territories by the Israeli military authorities! In view of the Labour Alignment's expectation of an alliance of Syna and Jordan against the Palestinian people -

The Israeli Council for Israeli-Palestinian Peace addresses itself to all who believe in peace, both in Israel and abroad: If the Syrian army, with the active connivance of the Israeli navy, had succeeded in eliminating the responsible and moderate leadership of the PLO, this would not have solved the Palestinian problem, nor removed it from the world's agenda. The extremist positions of Abu Saleh and Abu Moussa — aided and abetted by the Syrian regime — which call for the destruction of Israel, can lead only to a renewal of the terror and the continued shedding of both Israeli and Palestinian blood.

The Shi'ite population in southern Lebanon, previously sympathetic to Israel, has, since the invasion of Lebanon, become a dangerous new factor which could set off a major war in the region. Only an immediate Israel withdrawal from Lebanon can prevent this happening.

Meanwhile, the systematic harassment of the Palestinian population in the occupied territories by the Israeli settlers keeps inflaming the already incendiary situation, and perpetuates hostility and strife. The settlements are also a considerable drain on the Israeli economy, thus increasing the difficulties of large sectors of the Israeli public.

At such a time, all of us - in Israel and abroad - who believe in peace, must demand a halt to the headlong race to destruction. The Israel government must announce its willingness to make a just peace. based on the following principles:

Reciprocal recognition by Israel and the Arab countries; - Israeli recognition of the rights of the Palestinian people to selfdetermination and to an independent state on the West Bank, and in the Gaza Strip and East Jerusalem - alongside Israel, and at peace

— The evacuation of the territories occupied by Israel in the 1967 war. within the framework of a general peace treaty with all the Arab states. as well as the PLO, which is the Pelestinian people's recognized and independent leadership.

As a first step, the government of Israel should immediately stop all further settlement in the occupied territories, design from suppressing the Palestinian population, and remove the navel blockade of Tripoli.

AFTER YEARS of service in the U.S. Senate, Jacob Javits, the retired Jewish senator from New York, continues to monitor relations between Jerusalem and Washington.

"The state of relations between the two countries is very good," he says. "The U.S. needs friends and allies in the Middle East, and Israel ")" presents such an ally — an ally which helps to preserve the interests of the U.S. in the area."

The ailing Senator, who lives in Park Avenue, Manhattan, recalls a period in the mid-fifties when Presi-Bent Dwight Eisenhower sent him to Israel to try to persuade Israel not to "go communist."

The U.S. perceived a real danger

-- at the time that Israel, disappointed with the level of aid and support it received from the U.S., would attempt to draw closer to the Soviet bloc. But David Ben-Gurion was unequivocal when he met Javits: "It is unthinkable," he said, "that a nation like ours, committed to the democratic values, would try to join forces with a totalitarian system."

Today, no one could imagine Israel "going communist." On the contrary, Javits is concerned that Israel is now too dependent on the U.S. and that it does not realize the limits of its relations with America.

"The U.S. and the West still depend to a large extent on the Arab oil." notes Javits. "At the same time, the U.S. remains committed to a political arrangement in the West Bank and Gaza. The Reagan plan, let there be no mistake, is not

"footnote" in American-Israeli relations. Israel, he says, must realize that neither the U.S. administration nor the American people will not tolerate any arrangement that amounts to the annexation of the territories.

The time will come, he adds, when Israel will have to sit down with the Palestinians or with King Hussein - or both - and reach an agreement on the future of the West Bank. And Javits hopes that Israeli politics now being implemented in the territories are not aimed at sabotaging efforts to reach such

But even with a territorial compromise in the West Bank, he admits that some arrangement will have to be found which is acceptable to the Israeli settlers already living in that area.

Javits hopes that current Palestinian infighting will lead to an emergence of a more moderate Palestinian leadership both in the territories and among some elements of the PLO.

"It's not 'bye bye PLO'," he says. "The U.S. and Israel will face a Syrian-controlled radical PLO leadership, on the one hand; but on the other, there will be an opportunity to deal with those moderate Palestinians who are frustrated over the PLO's tactics and who may be willing to discuss peace with Israel."

says that "the Israeli people will have to reach a judgment on whether the price they paid for that war, taking into consideration its results, was worthwhile."

And he is sceptical about the value for U.S. interests in the region: "Look at the mess we have gotten ourselves into," he observes, referring to the bombing of the Marine headquarters in Beirut.

He cautions against any U.S. retaliatory attack against Syria and supports a slow disengagement of U.S. forces from that country: 'We should not withdraw from Lebanon as long as the reconciliation talks between the Lebanese parties are going on," he asserts. But if the Jemayel government refuses to make compromises to the other groups in Lebanon, we should make it clear that we don't have any business staying in Lebanon."

"We should, together with the French, British and Italians, withdraw from Lebanon, perhaps to be replaced by a UN force.

JAVITS DECLINED to comment on Israel's domestic politics, although he did observe that "Begin and Sharon's policies with regard to the West Bank have hurt Israel's image in the U.S."

in the long run, he adds, Israel faces a major challenge in the U.S. Javits' generation of Jewish and non-Jewish politicians lived during the Holocaust period, witnessed the birth of the Jewish state and have a sentimental approach to Israel.

They are leaving the political scene, and Israel's major challenge in the future will be to cement its relations with the new generation of congressmen and media people who are now emerging.

THE BILLION-DOLLAR scientific laboratory that was carried into space on Monday is the most spectacular gift from Europe to the U.S. since the French people sent the Statue of Liberty to America a century ago.

But the German scientist — who is the first non-American aboard a U.S. space craft — is most anxious to play down flag-waving aspects of e first Spacelab flight: "There is no French science and no British science," says Ulf Merbold. "Science in itself is international." In the case of the first Spacelab flight, that's a fact. The billion-dollar laboratory, in the cargo hold of the space shuttle Columbia, was designed, developed, paid for and built by the European Space Agency. The 70 experiments were provided by scientists in 11 European countries, as well as the United States, Canada

Under an agreement with the European Space Agency, the United States is not charging for carrying the Spacelab. Member states in the European agency are Belgium, Denmark, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, Sweden, "Switzerland, Britain and the Federal Republic of Germany. Austria is an associate member, while Sweden did not take part in building Spacelab.

"More than any other programine in the history of the peaceful exploration and utilization of space, Spacelab epitomizes the fruitful results of international ¿cooperation," said a joint publica-"tion of the two space agencies:

JUST LAUNCHING the 17-ton laboratory and experiment pallet was a considerable achievement. To make the fullest use of the interaction of scientists aloft with those on the ground, Spacelab depends on a whole new step in communications: .NASA had intended to have two huge satellites in place to relay millions of bits of digital data; instead, through various mishaps, it has only one - and that is not working used for working with fluids. On earth, when a heavy and a light material are heated, melted and mixed, the heavier components settle before the mixture cools to a solid. In weightless space, the mixture remains uniform.

Within an hour or two after the launch on Monday, Garriott and Lichtenberg,— on the blue shift with Shaw — opened a hatch on Columbia's middeck and floated through a z-shaped tube into the laboratory.

The scientists are loading prepackaged cartridges containing sample materials into four furnaces and processing chambers.

Although it is a common belief that earth travels through a void, scientists have learned in the past 20 vears that it moves through an active, energy-flooded environment as it orbits around the sun. Magnetic fields envelop the planet and energized particles strike its upper atmosphere. Electrified gases, called plasmas, flow, past earth at speeds of over 1,000 km. per second.

Six experiments — two from West Germany and one each from Austria, France, Japan and the United States - are designed to investigate these processes.

One of those tests is with an developed by Japan's Institute of Space and Astronautical Science. It shoots gas streams and highintensity electrons into plasmas. Spacelab carries six instruments for cloudless, haze-free studies of the sun and stars, examining radiations that do not penetrate earth's atmosphere. Three of the instruments - one each from France, the Netherlands and the United States - examine radiations from the stars. Three others - from the United States, France and Belgium study radiations from the sun. Also on board Spacelab are two instruments to study the earth's surface and four to study the atmosphere.

SCIENTISTS IN the field of earth resources have been hampered by the fact that little more than onethird of all land areas have been mapped adequately. The Spacelab crew will use a German-built camera with 24-centimetre film to determine whether it can be used to map the remaining two-thirds of lands more quickly and with better detail than can be obtained from unmanned satellites.

Another West German experiment is a microwave sensor that can "see" land and ocean surfaces under all weather conditions. It will be useful for agriculture and for the fishing and transportation in-

SINCE TAKING up his position as spokesman and press counsellor at the Israeli Embassy in Cairo several months ago, Yitzhak Bar-Moshe has had many close encounters with the Egyptian intelligentsia. One of the few Israeli authors writing in Arabic, Bar-Moshe, 55, has found the Egyptians particularly friendly, approachable, possessed of their own brand of humour — and interested in Israel.

Our problem with Egypt, says the Israel Radio veteran and founder and former editor of el-Anba, Israel's Arabic daily, is lack of human contact. We should get to know the Egyptians, and they us. And one way to achieve this is through an exchange of literature,

The Jerusalem Post is widely read in Egyptian intellectual circles, and translations of Hebrew works would sell well, Bar-Moshe believes, citing an issue of Ariel in Arabic which sold by the thousands. He is currently translating a second issue of the arts review, and would like to see translations of our prayer books, which would show the Egyptians how similar our modes of worship are. (A curious twist: his novel A House in Baghdad recently appeared in Hebrew.)

The Egyptians are intensely patriotic, says Bar-Moshe, regarding themselves as Egyptians first and Arabs second. Egypt itself is Umm el-dunia — mother of the world. There is a prevalent feeling of cultural separateness and superiority over the rest of the Arab world: even Islam is just a chapter · albeit an important one — in their 7,000-year civilization.

And the Egyptians are well aware of the magnitude of their cultural contribution to the Arab world: no Arab writer, poet or singer gains recognition in his own country unless he first wins acclaim in Egypt.

Bar-Moshe says people were surprised to hear of the existence of Israeli literature in Arabic, and many asked for his books. October editor Anis Mansour reviewed A House in Baghdad, and a writer from Alexandria asked the counsellor whether he would send him all the books published in Israel in Arabic, since he intended to learn about Israelis "with no political strings attached."

More than 1,000 people study Hebrew language and literature in Cairo; at the religious university, el-Azhar, there is a department of Hebrew. And Israel's Academic Institute in the capital, headed by Prof. Shimon Shamir, reports a constant demand from students for translations in both languages.

BAR-MOSHE considers it a great pity that specialists in Israel deal only with the old guard of Egyptian writers - Naguib Mahfouz, Taufiq el-Hakim and Yusuf Idris, neglecting members of the new generation like Ismail Wali e-Din, Majid Tuvia, Yusuf Izz el-Din Issa, Fat'hi el-Ebiari and Na'im Tagla.

The older writers are all advocates of peace, as they were even during the Nasser regime. Before 1973, Mahfouz wrote that Egypt could not bear two banners - war and progress - simultaneously, and attacked Nasser in three novels on the war with Israel (without, of course, mentioning Israel by name). His last work, Amam el-Arsh (Before the Throne), an historical evaluation of Egyptian rulers from Menna the great to Anwar Sadat, appeared three months ago. Its message is that Egypt should live in peace with its neighbours and look after its people.

El-Hakim, the 85-year-old doyen of Egyptian literature whose books and plays have been translated into several languages, including Hebrew, proclaimed his support of peace in the press during the Sadat regime. His call for peace and tolerance has now resulted in attacks from the fundamentalists.

In contrast to the liberal Mahfouz and el-Hakim, Idris is defined as a leftist, although Bar-Moshe 'wouldn't say he's against the peace treaty." Idris maintains that Sadat could have gained more concessions from Israel had he proceeded more slowly. He should have waited a few years after the initial step and taken the reactions of other Arab countries into account. Like the other two writers, Idris does not mention the Yom Kippur war nor, for that matter, does the issue of Egyptian-Israeli relations appear in any serious literature.

The new generation of Egyptian writers do not define themselves as right or left politically or socially. They are concerned with the fate of the Egyptian people and express disillusionment with Hosni Mubarak, on whom they had pinned high hopes.

And they are fighting another kind of disillusionment — on the professional front. They know that years of anonymity await them in the shadow of the giants of the old guard, since there is no enlightened criticism at home and the few critics there are ignore them. The threeyear-old quarterly Fusul deals only with famous writers of the 19th and early 20th centuries, and, except for the excellent monthly Ibdaa, there are no literary magazines. Those dailies which have literary supplements do not carry systematic reviews.

And these young writers deserve to be known: Yusuf Izz el-Din's novels, for instance, are amazingly Kafkaesque in atmosphere. Ismail Wali el-Din deals with the subject of intermarriage in a short novel about a liberated Jewish woman who marries a Moslem. The marriage doesn't work out, but the author's treatment of the woman is fairly sympathetic.

Alexandria's Na'im Taqla has published a collection of short stories in Israel, some of which describe relations between Jews and non-Jews in Egypt before 1948. This did earn him considerable acclaim at home, however, making him the exception that proves the rule.

WHILE EGYPTIAN literature does not acknowledge Israei's existence, preferring to concern itself with what it deems the immediate problems of the ordinary individual, the press does so with a vengeance.

I have to say that Israel has a very bad press in Egypt," says Bar-Moshe. "They contend that Israel doesn't want peace, but to grab Arab land everywhere, and that Moshe Stern, accustomed to appearing on American stages, slipped into the Ashkenazi pronunciation (the Sephardi was the general rule here), and in emotional expression reminded me of a tenor in an Italian opera. Well, the audience loved it, and that is probably what counts.

THE ISRAEL Philharmonic Orchestra announces a series of chamber music recitals, in which three of our most outstanding younger artists will participate. The first, by Pinhas Zukerman will be on December 25. He will be accompanied by his regular collaborator,

Mark Neikrug. Daniel Barenboim will present a piano recital on April 23, and on June 24, Itzhak Perlman and Bruno Canino will perform together. All recitals will take place at Heichal Hatarbut in Tel Aviv, and subscription tickets are on sale at the IPO Office, MUSIC EVENING AT TZAVTA with Dazlel Fradkin, Baroque violin; Michael Haran, cello; Ariel Cobea and Irit Rob-Steiner, piano; Peter Arnet Cohen and Irit Rob-Steiner, piano; Peter March double bass; Naomi Lev, piano; Lazar Shuster, Raphael Frenkel, violin; Shimon Kopelausky, Rahel Kamm, viola Vivaldi; Sonata for violin and cello; Hindemith: Sonata for double bass and piano; Faure: "Dolly," suite for piano, four-hands; Dvorak: String Quintet Opus 97 (Tzavta, Tel Aviv, November 23).

THIS SERIES of chamber-music concerts coordinated by Michael Haran, now in its second season, shapes up as an attractive offering indeed. Not that the concrete walls (painted black) on of the Tel Aviv club have any special appeal nor, for that matter, did the chairs piled up on top of one another so the performers could sit comfortably. But the artistic framework has some good things going for it. The programmes have been varied, absorbing and, for a change, free of thematic labels, a favourite idea with our musical establishment. The relaxed atmosphere no stiff, didactic airs here - pt the music-making in the centre attention.

The presentations of the late programme ranged from the fascinating to the competent. To "Dolly" by Faure was superb. An Cohen and Irit Rob-Sterner plays with elegance and refinement as +---yet with freedom. The balance ar precision of their collaboration knothing to be desired.

Peter Marck, the double-ba player, gave an impressive readir of Hindemith's strong, rarely hear sonata, proving the unquestionab expressivity of his instrumen Naomi Lev, after a blurred fir movement, contributed a correpiano part.

The Vivaldi was performed on Baroque violin, a "regular" celi and with two Baroque bows. Th violin part contained a great mar. embellishnents and free articult tion, which Daniel Fradkin handle with evident expertise. Interpretive imagination, however, was missing and the performance never reali

Prior to 1967, Tel Aviv was the focal point of diplomatic activities. Jerusalem was too small to handle the succession of glittering events, and the Dan was the most popular venue for parties and conferences. TIMOUS TYPES OF VARIOUS TYPES OF HIGH OUALITY Several ambassadors, whose countries had not yet acquired permanent ambassadorial residences, set up house in the Dan, and their presence contributed to the hotel's international ambience.

Even when other five-star hotels began cropping up on the beachfront, the Dan was considered to be in a class of its own. Dan Tel Aviv general manager Victor Sassoon, who worked at the Tel Aviv Hilton from the mid-1960s till the early 1970s, remembers that the Dan was always seen as "something special" by its competitors. That image has been preserved.

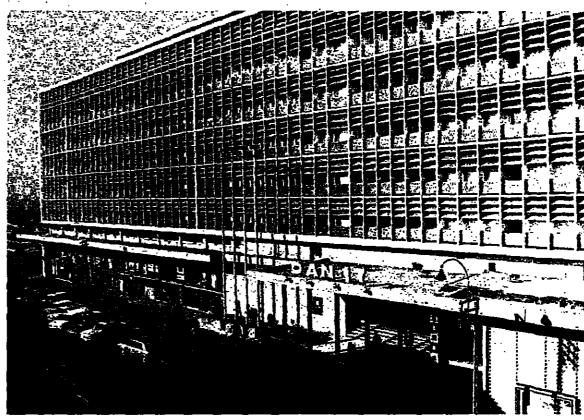

When the Federman brothers purchased the 21-room Kaete Dan in 1946, they had ambitious ideas. Their ambitions haven't diminished. For example, old hotels tend to get seedy, but the Federmans have not permitted seediness to erode the Dan. On the contrary, they have been investing consistently to maintain the standards set in 1953.

The Dan has undergone several stages of expansion and renovation. it now has 340 guest rooms, magnificent banquet and seminar facilities, a wide choice of

Most bank staffers reject voluntary salary cuts

By MACABEE DEAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. - The workers committees of most of the major banks and of the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange vesterday issued a statement rejecting the proposal that they "volunteer to cut their wages" due to the difficult current economic conditions. The proposal was made several days ago by the Finance Ministry.

The workers committees of the Leumi, Discount and Mizrahi banks and of the Bank of Israel, signed the statement. The committees of Hapoalim and the First International banks have not signed the statement and negotiations with them continue.

The statement issued yesterday points out that the workers are "willing to take a cut," but first want to see an example set by the heads of the various government ministries and government companies. Moreover, they think that "those who made small fortunes due to the conditions formerly reigning in the country" should be the first to make sacrifices.

Until this is done, the workers will stand firm by the collective wage agreements which, they point out, are protected by law. Under these collective wage agreements any changes in wages or conditions of work have to be freely negotiated between management and labour. So far, management has not put forward any proposal to open such Technology venture capital draws European interest

BONN (Reuter). - Venture capital financing aimed at bolstering young innovative companies to the point of commercial take-off is increasingly seen as a key to Europe's fight against the U.S. and Japanese lead in technology. But European financiers, wary after bad ex-periences in lending to the Third World and Eastern Bloc, are not giving money away to new technology whiz-kids.

Separate announcements this autumn by three major European electronics groups, Siemens of West Germany, the Dutch firm Philips and Olivetti of Italy, that they were forming venture capital units, showed they recognized the importance of this type of funding.

All three firms spend vast amounts on in-house research and development, but see small units, in which innovators are personally engaged, playing a vital role. The U.S. experience in California's Silicon Valley, where many small firms clustered around academic centres set the pace in developing new technology, demonstrated how venture capital could aid firms until they become commercially and financially viable.

Japan, which jointly with the U.S. leads the world in new technology, recently eased business access to venture capital, when securities brokerage houses relaxed their rules on over-the-counter trading. European government and finance officials caution that West Europe's economic climate is very different from the U.S. and that the American experience cannot necessarily be applied here.

However, U.S. reports that an estimated $8 billion of venture capital has produced 600,000 new jobs make the concept attractive to unemployment-hit European governments and industry.

The European Venture Capital Association (EVCA) was launched in Brussels earlier this month with the backing of the European Community's executive commission. It groups 53 members from among the Community's leading venture capital companies.

West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl recently announced a DM 100m ($37m.) plan to boost new technology-orientated firms, backed by tax incentives and measures to make it easier to form a company.

Spancrete lands three contracts worth $1.5m.

FAITH IN ISRAEL'S ECONOMY

Special to the Post

TEL AVIV. - "Israel's basic economy is sound and the country's greatest natural resource - the brain power of its people — is unaffected by the current economic turmoil." This is stated by U.S. husiness leader Elmer L. Winter (Manpower Inc.), who is the chairman of the Committee for Economic Growth of Israel,

"After talking to many business executives during my stay in Israel I sense that this storm will be weathered," Winter says.

It is true that Israel owes $21.5 billion. However 75 per cent of this debt is not owed on a commercial basis, savs Winter. It is owed to two friendly governments and to the Jewish people through Israel Bonds. The remaining 25 per cent of the foreign debt is owed to banks -Israeli and others. Only half of that 25 per cent is in short-term loans. Israeli banks have accumulated in Israel more than $5b. in foreign deposits and have more than $12b. abroad. The banks are not knocking on Israel's door for payments.

"I am confident that Israel can and will pull herself up by her own bootstraps. Israeli business executives are quick on their feet and will recover. I believe they will meet Finance Minister Yigal Cohen-Orgad's goal of increasing exports

In 1965, Israel exported $25 million worth of technologically advanced products (2.5 per cent of the total). In 1972, these exports grew to $103m. - still only seven per cent of total industrial exports. In 1982, these exports amounted to $1.28b., representing almost 34 per cent of all industrial exports. Furthermore, last year almost 70 per cent of Israel's industrial exports were goods, machinery, and industrial components which were manufactured as a result of Research and Development (R&D) nurtured and brought to fruition during the last 12-15 years.

Israel can point with pride to the fact that her exports to the U.S. for the first eight months of 1983 grew by 11.6 per cent to $783,3m., compared to the same period last year. Today there are almost 1.000 R&D projects in process in the country. In 1983 Israel will spend close to 2.3 per cent of its GNP in R&D programmes, Winter points

Israel has become one of the world's ten leading export nations on a per capita basis, with exports of $5.5b. in goods last year, he adds. As a result of the recent changes, American companies operating in

Moshe Shamir, managing director of Vishay Israel, a subsidiary of Vishay (U.S.A.), pointed out: "In spite of the recent economic events, we continue all of our activities with sales and profits as usual."

Elmer L. Winter

Israel have had the advantage of

"We in America should look upon the recent economic adjustments as a launching pad for making increased investments in Israel a time to bring know-how to Israel and to buy Israeli products. This is the time for U.S. business executives to visit Israel to study the high-technology developments of the country. They will quickly understand that Israel is the in place for innovation," Winter says.

Eli Hurvitz, president of the israel Manufacturers Association, in a recent address to Jewish philanthropists, made a strong and timely appeal: "The time has passed when Jewish leaders are able to fulfil their obligations to the State of Israel solely by means of contributions, or by acquiring State of Israel Bonds. Now is the time for all Jewish leaders and businessmen to harness their energies through assisting Israel's economy by active partnership and the concrete displays of confidence. The most important branch with scope for development is industry.

"I am confident that Israel's dynamics will move the country forward. I don't underestimate Israel's economic strength, The country's private sector is definitely on the path of growth. Israel has a way of going from survival to revival, states Elmer Winter.

By MACABEE DEAN Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — A medium-sized private company, Meir Ezra & Son. has received permission to float an issue on the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange without the backing of any underwriter.

The company's prospectus was drawn up by Daniel Tamir, an economist, with the help of Dr. Yehuda Shenhay, also an economist and a senior lecturer in business administration at Tel Aviv University. The company expects to raise $1.6 million when registration is opened next week. It is offering

1,800,000 shares, but the exchange has stipulated that if 1,100,000 are not taken up, the issue must be withdrawn. For the past half year, not one of the major underwriters, the large banks, or even the smaller ones, have floated issues due to the Fund to train electronics engineers

Jerusalem Post Reporter TEL AVIV. - A fund to help finance the education of engineers in the fields of electronics and computers (both hardware and software) is now being organized by Elisha Shahmoon, general manager of Motorola and president of the Society of Electronic Manufacturers.

Shahmoon noted that the present shortage of trained manpower in this field, which was only beginning to be felt, would grow in severity unless steps were taken immediately. Under his plan, each plant employing ten or more engineers in these fields would contribute $100 a year towards the fund for each engineer on its staff, and this sum would be matched by the authorities. The monies would be passed on to institutions of higher

He also noted that an engineer in these three fields had an "added value" of $35,000 to $40,000 a yer on the goods he produced, while other engineers had an "adde value" of only $16,000 to $20,000

In industries devoted to the fields, engineers constituted 40 to 5 per cent of all manpower, and the chances to devote themselves to & D were high, he said. These is dustries spend about 12 per cent i their turnover in R & D, while othe industries spend only 1.5 per cent t two per cent.

margin of eight-to-five. There were three "buyers only," simulations, while six issues were "sellers only." Gainers of more than five per cent totalled 54, in contrast to 27 securities that fell by similar margins.

The shekel was devalued by 0.6 per cent against the dollar:

Trading on the share market continues to be mostly professional investors and speculators, even though the market has shown advances during seven out of the past eight sessions, it still seems that the issues which make smart upward moves shortly afterwards become the object of profit-taking. In such a market only the very nimble can successfully dart in and out and be left with a profit. The untrained investor who would try his hand would in all likelihood, discover that he is buying when the pros are selling and subsequently he is selling at lower prices to the same pros.

Some 70 per cent of the total turnover was concentrated in the commercial bank group. Prices were mixed, especially in the group of shares which are part of the agreement with the Treasury. Leumi advanced by 1.9 per cent, Israel, General by one per cent, as Union Bank edged 0.8 per cent higher. The Hapoalim shares came under selling Specialized financial institution issues were moderately higher. The Federation of Contractors stock was 4.6 per cent improved, while Shilton advanced by 3.5 per cent.

Insurance shares were fractionally lower. Re-Insurance 0.1 was 9.3 per cent, lower while Menorah picked up a four per cent gain,

The services and trade group enjoyed rising prices. Cold Storage 0.1 rose by 9.6 per cent, while Teta 1 was not far behind with a gain of 9.4 per cent. Profit-taking caught up with Bonded 0.1 and it was registered as "sellers" only." The same was true of Crystal, which fell by 8.8 per cent.

Land development, real estate and citrus plantation shares were slightly higher. Arledan 0.1 picked up by 6.3 per cent, as Bayside 0.1 and 0.5 rose by as much as 11.3 per cent. Property and Building, Bayside's parent, continued its easing action as it lost five points. The Property and Building issue which has been generally considered as a "blue chip" in its field, has seen its price deteriorate by some 13 per cent over the past month. Solei Boneh, on the other hand, was ahead by 5.5 per cent.

meetings. Although they are known to have different views on the appropriate public level of strategic cooperation with Israel, they did not let their differences surface during the sessions.

Indeed, one Israeli official said that Weinberger was "warmer" toward Israel during these current talks than during any of the previous six meetings this official had had with the U.S. defence chief. There was considerable U.S.-

Israeli agreement on many aspects of the Lebanese problem.

IDF chief of military intelligence Aluf Ehod Barak and Middle East envoy Richard Fairbanks drafted a document outlining a joint position and came up with several points: Both the U.S. and Israel recognize the "brutal" nature of Syrian objectives in Lebanon.

. Both want to cooperate to strengthen the Lebanese government of President Amin Jemayel who is due to arrive here tonight for talks tomorrow with Reagan.

On Monday, Israel was informed that a Pentagon delegation would leave for Israel in early December to study areas of military medical cooperation, as well as joint projects involving military research and development.

Meanwhile, Yehiel Kadishai, the head of the prime minister's bureau, spoke by telephone with former prime minister Menachem Begin on Monday, apparently to bring him up to date on the course of the talks. He said Begin has a long, white beard and was feeling fine.

Last night, after midnight Israel time. Shamir was the guest of honour at a gala dinner hosted by Vice President George Bush.

Cuts across the board

THE MUCH AWAITED Treasury plan for cuts in government expenditure was unveiled by the finance minister in an appearance before the Knesset Finance Committee on Monday, Yoram Aridor's legacy to his successor was a planned budget slash of $2 billion this year. Yigal Cohen-Orgad now concedes that one billion is a more realistic figure, and since the fiscal year is already in large part behind us, this means that the effective saving will amount to no more than $700 million. Moreover, close to one half of the purported budget cuts are to take the form of higher taxes. These require Knesset approval, and judging by criticism voiced in the committee, such approval will not easily be granted.

A detailed analysis of the Treasury's proposals reveals, too, that some of the cuts in planned activities are offset by fresh allocations for new unplanned activities. A case in point is the Defence Ministry's budget, which is to be pared down by $150 million. At the same time the ministry is to receive an extra $300 million to cover unplanned expenses linked to Israel's prolonged stay in Lebanon.

For next year the Treasury suggests further budget cuts. These are amply warranted, if only because it is fully expected that state revenues will fall in 1984. The culprits will be the recession, and a ramshackle tax collecting system.

In programming further cuts, the Treasury should be more careful than before to order the national priorities. Eminently postponable projects such as the Med-Dead Canal should be put on ice. American aid for the development of the Lavi fighter aircraft need not be reason for the Defence Ministry not to tighten its own belt. The unrelenting Agudat Yisrael must for once be put in its place. And the "mere" $400 million currently being spent from state funds on settlements in Judea and Samaria could still offer significant opportunities for

There is no other rational way to reduce real government spending.

Breeding crime

IF, AS HAS BEEN suggested, the measure of a society is the way it treats its prisoners, Israel has good cause for soulsearching.

The country's jails are badly overcrowded, and conditions in them are fairly abominable. This week the Ramle prison, Israel's largest, has been the focus of bad publicity. But the prize exhibit remains the Beersheba police lockup, on which a parade of visiting officials and politicians during the past several weeks has decisively turned thumbs down. The chief corrections officer in the Labour and Social Affairs Ministry. Menahem Horowitz, for example, has described it as "unfit for human beings."

Shoshana Arbeli-Almoslino, chairwoman of the Knesset Interior Committee, has come out of the lockup saying she felt Originally designed to hold 47 suspects, the Beersheba police lockup in fact houses some 80 people a day. Not all of these are awaiting interrogation, or trial. Many are convicts for whom space has simply not been available in regular jails. Some, too, are minors, who under the rules should be provided with separate accommodation.

The sanitation facilities in the lockup are unspeakable. there is no roof over the main corridor, and there are not enough beds, mattresses and blankets for everyone. These are indeed conditions for breeding crime and not for correcting it.

The Southern District Police Commander says he is well aware of these conditions, but that there is nothing he can do to improve them. The Interior Ministry, which is responsible for the nation's police and their prisoners, places the blame on judges who would not let suspects out on bail after being charged — although they do so under pressure from the police - and holds out hope for some improvement only when more space will become available, perhaps in a year's time.

Given the country's economic situation, and the Treasury's policy, this means that the Beersheba police lockup is to remain as overcrowded as it is.

Yet this cannot be allowed to happen. A short-term solution would seem to be available. There are, according to reliable reports, institutional buildings around the country that are vacant or barely used. They could be made to accommodate the lockup inmates who do not really belong there.

Interior Minister Yosef Burg has not been to the Beersheba police lockup for at least two years. His aides say it is not necessary for him to see the place to appreciate what it is that gives rise to criticism. If that is so, he cannot let another day pass without taking corrective action. For the Beersheba police lockup is less an instrument of law enforcement than an instance of man's inhumanity to man.

A FORTUNE TELLER'S prophecy and a horoscope prediction proved uncannily true for a retired English canteen waitress who received a recently won £759,035 in Britain's football pools.

THE TOPIC of terrorism was recently taken up in the pages of The Jerusalem Post, not in the context of the PLO's character as a "terrorist" or "national liberation" organization, nor that of terrorist activities in Europe and Latin America. It was terrorism in connection with Prime Minister Shamir's past and the history of Etzel and Lehi that was taken up by Susan Hattis Rolef in an article on November 10, with Misha Louvish continuing the discussion on November 23. Dr. Rolef's central thesis was that there is no essential difference between individual and non-selective mass terrorism. Mr. Louvish seems to accept and support this view.

I should like to discuss this thesis independently of the question whether behind the publication of these pieces was the desire to induce or strengthen disapproval of the prime minister and to further the chances of his government falling. If this was the intention, surely Shamir's opponents will find other grounds upon which to attack him, aside from his involvement with individual acts of terror during the struggle against British rule. To make my position on Mr. Shamir's tenure clear, I will say that I believe that as prime minister, he is an improvement over his predecessor; that what the country really needs is a broad coalition; and that I don't particularly care whether it is headed by Shamir or Peres. The party balance in the Knesset makes Shamir, at this time, the more likely candidate; in the future, Peres or a third man may have a better propagation of the thesis that individual and mass terror are essentially identical and equally deserve condemnation. I don't mind Mr. Louvish's error on this score, but I do mind if a university lecturer in political science, who presumably knows better, makes statements to in explaining the difference between the two phenomena, as it is generally understood by serious students of the problem, I shall restrict myself to the discussion of antigovernment and anti-establishment terror, as distinguished from government and police terror another widely-spread, deplorable practice. What I have to say is based not on the present controversy, but on a study of mine, Contradictory Trends in the Use of Violence, written in 1975 and published, in German, in 1977.

DEMOCRATIC THOUGHT absolutely repudiates the use of violence in the struggle for social and political changes where the existing regime permits the waging of such struggle by persuasion, free voting and non-violent pressure. Where none of these is possible, violence is regarded as a necessary evil and may be used, but only to the minimum extent possible. Armed uprising, involving violence against the upholders of the regime. is tolerated in such cases, even though it may cost the lives of multitudes.

Selective terror, that is violence against individuals who occupy central positions in the oppressive regime: are active in its service; or otherwise hinder the desired change, is sometimes regarded as the lesser evil, since its victims are fewer and there is less chance that innocent bystanders will be affected. Thus individual terror were practiced by adherents of narodnaia volia and social-revolutionaries in Russia and by 19th-century anarchists. Thus Hagana emissaries killed De Haan in 1924, those of Lehi killed Lord Moyne and Count Bernadotte, and those of Etzel killed two British sergeants in the course of the pre-State struggle. The bombing of the King David Hotel in 1946 also might be considered an act of selective terror, though the purpose of that action was to destroy the enemy's headquarters without causing loss of life.

As against this, civilian deaths in the course of battle, with Deir Yassin as an example, are deplorable incidents of warfare, to be avoided as much as possible; but unfortunately occurring again and again, and not properly acts of terror.

Social democrats and, in their wake, orthodox communists reject in principle individual terror, but in fact Russian Communists resorted to individual violence even for the secondary purpose of obtaining money (the so-called "requisitions"). All movements, have engaged in violent uprisings and underground activities, however liberal and democratic, to justify killing traitors in their own ranks. Whether individual terror should be dismissed under any and all circumstances, is therefore highly questionable.

Were the conspirators who tried to kill Hitler and his entourage -celebrated today as heroes in democratic Germany - morally wrong? A similar question might be directed toward attempts to kill individuals like the late mufti, Ameen Al-Husseini, Idi Amin of Uganda, the notorious Carlos and others of NON-SELECTIVE mass terror of the anti-regime and antiestablishment kind is an innovation of the 20th century. Among its first perpetrators were those in Kenya and Algeria who resorted to masskillings of European settlers in order to induce the British and French Governments to relinquish these territories. Its main perpetrators since then have been the PLO, the Red Brigades and other terrorist groups in Italy, the IRA (especially when bombfilg civilian objectives in Britain), urban guerrillas in Latin America and similar groupings in Germany and Japan (lately weakened and less active). Characteristically, such (errorists are especially active in democratic countries, where opposition to the regime may be expressed by peaceful means with telling results.

The purpose of these groups is to weaken the regimes they oppose by indirect means, by killing random persons unconnected with the regime and thus sowing panic among the general population. Civilians are not these groups' incidental victims; they are their untended victims. Such tactics are justly abhorred by all civilized minds. Whatever one's stand on the use of individual terror and its use in specific circumstances, the distinction between it and non-selective mass terror is basic and farreaching, Ignoring this distinction or minimizing its importance is a major error.

An open letter to the prime minister from Othman Hallik, a Palestinian intellectual and prominent businessman who lives on the West Bank.

Dear Mr. Shamir.

Israeli and Palestinian peoples have to abandon extreme and radical ideologies, which reject any compromise on the land; and which lead only to polarization of opinion. There exists to-day a golden op-portunity to resolve the Palestinian-Israeli conflict, and Israel must not miss this opportunity. It is no longer true that the Palestinians refuse to accept Israel's existence; nor is it true that many of the Arab States are not prepared to recognize Israel and even establish relations with it. But this is not unconditionally so. They are ready to accept a peaceful settlement — the condition being that Israel undertakes a radical reevaluation of its position by: Adoption of a clear peace strategy, abandoning their present settlement policies in the territories and commitment to an all-out peace initiative toward the Palestinians and a sincere desire to implement. Security Council Resolution 242, rights. This will have the effect of mobilizing the peace forces among the Palestinians and will attract them with Jordan to the negotiating

IT IS well known that the way to stability is the end of occupation; without that there can be no stability. Peace cannot be achieved by annexing the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, or by denying the rights of the Palestinians, or by proceeding with the present settlement policy. This policy will only keep Palestinian hands tied, and they will not cross the threshold to peace and compromise. Israel was built into a state through the successful moulding of various cultures which shape the Israeli character. But in the last decade the stress shifted from building a Jewish state to the stress on the "Eretz Yisrael" militant version of religion and state.

These new norms were created by

Gush Emunim; and it seems that the present Israeli Government is controlled by this distinctive ideological view. This movement is marginal in Israeli society since it serves neither the security of Israel nor the peace process with which the Israeli public identifies.

The Palestinians are wary of the extreme elements and organizations within Israeli society. We feel that the Israelis have to be committed to resolve the Palestinian problem from a purely moral stance. If the present government wants to regain the confidence of the Palestinians, it has to build bridges of trust with these people. It has to make provision for more political freedom.

Allow the Palestinians to develop their resources, economically and socially. Stop the economic elbowing-out of the Palestinians and start economic reforms to enable them to build an infrastrucure in their homeland. By allowing these people to develop and provide new opportunities for the young, and by building new facilities for health. agriculture, industry, housing, and education, we provide these people with hope for their future. This more than anything else will give the Palestinians confidence in themselves and will definitely bring the parties closer to understanding and peace, of which we are all in dire need.

For the plight of the Palestinia cannot be alleviated by using cate, phrases and big words "autonomy, self-rule," "Camp David," "Reagan Plan" but by establishing their institutions through which they can air their grievances and seek redress; and by developing; their economy and culture which will help them face their problems with courage.

This, Mr. Prime Minister, is 13 foundation and pragmatic step for reaching a lasting peace is Palestine, or if you wish "EretA

We hope that cooperation and. conflict resolution and their outcome in the bilateral relationship between Israel and the Palestinians 3 will be the theme of your discussion with President Reagan.

For only when we face up to these problems, and when the national rights of the Palestinians are recognized, will your invitation to King Hussein to "talk peace" have any constructive meaning!

READERS' LETTERS

ACCENTUATE THE POSITIVE

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — I am saddened by the readiness with which Israelis blame themselves or accept responsibility for conditions they cannot control (like bringing peace to the Middle East in spite of the disinclination of her neighbours to join hands, let alone accept the right of Israel to exist as a nation). Not content with trying to live up to standards of behaviour, preached but not practised in other countries, Israelis tend to shrug off achievements other people would crow over.

A comparatively trivial example of the above characteristics. prompts this letter. It is written in response to an article on tourism which appeared on October 27, discussing the campaign of Tourism Minister Avraham Sharir to increase tourism to Israel. If Israel is being overlooked as a vacation spot, I don't think it is because, as the headline of the article suggests, "Shoddy service, high prices hamper tourist trade." I think Tourism Minister Sharir faces more serious obstacles. Tourists go to France despite surly treatment. They go to Italy and come back with stories of a suitcase stolen at the airport, a purse snatched. They go to England and moan about the cost of

The road block to Israel is that it is perceived as a trouble spot. "Aren't you afraid?" ask friends who face the possibility of being mugged in their own neighbourhoods as Mayor Lahat of Tel Aviv was when he visited in Manhattan. Israelis should not blame themselves if the hositility of surrounding countries and skillful Arab propaganda make would-be visitors edgy. They should, on the other hand, take pride in the fact that visitors tour Israel quite safely

- and return home exhilarated by what they have seen here. Israel's international situation must be taken into account but, as the song goes (revised for reality), if you cannot "eliminate the negative, accentuate the positive." There is a curious phenomenon which might well be considered in promoting tourism: people visit Israel for emotional reasons. They come on religious tours. They come on tours sponsored by organizations committed to helping Israel or particular institutions in Israel. They come to visit family. They go home - as I wrote - exhilarated, Certainly any complaints about service, or high prices, or being taken in by a taxi driver can be heard from tourists returning from any country.

But — and here, I suggest, is a field that wants sowing - Israel is more than a worthwhile, uplifting place to visit. People go on vacation to "get away from problems." More emphasis could be put on the lighter, brighter side of visiting here. More emphasis and details could gointo wherever it is in Israel one can sail, fish, snorkle, hike. There's such a lot more to a vacation in Israel than "seeing what they've done," reliving the past, or helping with contributions.

I haven't mentioned music. In early October, a record shop in Manhattan advertised that the "famous four fiddlers" would appear to autograph their record album. The shop and street around it was jammed with, for the most
